Our cognitive programme is designed to keep seniors engaged through interesting and stimulating activities. While physical exercises are necessary to promote successful aging, it has been shown that regular cognitive exercises are important to keep the brain healthy and sharpen mental skills. Exercising the brain has been suggested by ADA as an option to reduce the risk of dementia.

Every game has been designed with the Singaporean senior in mind; embedding local engaging content.

Unfamiliar language, complex design interface and fear of technology are few of the many problems that discourage elderly to use tablets. SilverPad is a senior-friendly tablet that is optimized for use by the elderly by hiding these complexities. It is a complete entertainment system and its simple interface allows elders to independently navigate through music, videos, news, games and more. SilverPad is accompanied by a remote modular content management system that contains a drag and drop interface for staff to curate relevant content. This saves a lot of their time and effort as all the changes sync in real time across all the connected devices.
